For many years the feral goat problem at Haleakala National Park has been recognized as the most serious threat to the Park's resources. For almost as many years there has been the nagging question: "What has the Park been doing about it?" Unfortunately, the feral goat problem is only one of a number of threats to the Park's resources, both natural and cultural. A slide presentation will be shown to illustrate the more serious threats, with a brief discussion of the current status of the Park's efforts to mitigate these threats.
